SRDC Unveils New Web Page to Respond to Tough Economic Times

The SRDC is pleased to announce “Strengthening Communities and Economies,” a new addition to our Web site that addresses the economic challenges facing our nation and region. As part of our commitment to families, businesses, and communities in the rural south, “Strengthening Communities and Economies” highlights important information and resources that can prove useful in guiding the work that local people and groups are pursuing to strengthen their communities and economies during this period of economic uncertainty.

We have organized the new page into five major topics: (1) In the News, (2) About the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA) of 2009, (3) Grant Opportunities, (4) Educational Resources, and (5) Research Reports and Statistics. If you know of resources that should be incorporated into this page, please let us know. To view “Strengthening Communities and Economies,” visit <http://srdc.msstate.edu/crisis>.

Economic Research Service Suspends RIDGE Program for 2009

The SRDC would like to inform our research colleagues that the Economic Research Service (ERS) has suspended the RIDGE program for 2009. Here is the official announcement that ERS just released last week: "The RIDGE Program is being revised. Consequently, financial support for new studies will not be provided in fiscal 2009. We anticipate resumption of the program in fiscal 2010, subject to the availability of funds. The RIDGE Conference to present findings of studies currently being conducted will occur as scheduled on October 15-16, 2009."

Please know that the SRDC remains strongly committed to the RIDGE Program and we are hopeful that our Center will be able to secure funding for the RIDGE effort once ERS resumes the program in FY2010. Please let us know if you have any questions.

New Report Discusses Assets and Opportunities in the Mid South Delta Region

The Mid South Delta Region is blessed with some of our nation’s most diverse resources, resources that are linked to its culture heritage, natural resource amenities, and vibrant agriculture and manufacturing-based economies. But, local and global forces, along with technological advancements, have brought major stresses to the region. The newly released SRDC report, A Look at the Mid South Delta Region: A Glimpse of Its Assets, Socioeconomic Complexion, and Emerging Opportunities, discusses the region’s assets and stresses while looking forward to possibilities ahead to improve the social and economic conditions. This report was funded in part by the National Rural Funders Collaborative. View the full report at <http://srdc.msstate.edu/files/midsouthdeltareport.pdf>.

Congress Passes Historic Civic Engagement Legislation

On March 31, Congress passed the Edward M. Kennedy Serve America Act, a legislative initiative to expand and improve service opportunities for all Americans, harness social innovation toward public good, and ensure accountability, transparency and results. While this legislation represents a substantial increase in national service opportunities and encourages innovation across the sector, for National Conference on Citizenship, the Act is particularly meaningful for its accountability metrics and the inclusion of America's Civic Health Index. Traditionally Undercounted, Groups Step Up Effort to Get Accurate Numbers

What seems like a simple question — How many Hispanics are living in the United States? — has become surprisingly complex as the 2010 census approaches. Hispanics and other minorities have historically been undercounted in the once-a-decade survey. Advocacy groups are now launching their traditional efforts to ensure an accurate count, but a variety of factors have created new problems for the painting of America's official portrait.
